Section-B and Girammar Writing 3. Safe Driving by XYZ Accidents happen when people violate traffic rules. And, unlike the analogy of clapping, it takes only one hand to rid the earth. of multiple lives. If someone is driving in blatant disregard of traffic rules, he surely is a danger to timself - though sadly he poses a danger to all that find themselves on the same road as he. He is the suicide comberatet loose, and interestingly he doesn't even realise it. Traffic rules are regarded with distaste in the unruly Indian roads, For instance, most people wear helmets only near traffic pickets - as if they're humoring the police so as not to get a ticket and not for their safety. The underlying ignorance and twisted attitude wreak havoc on our roads, day in and day out, Pito.

The driver assumes himself safe between international safety standards and speeds through the lives of pedestrians and pavementdwellers - succumbing to a heavier vehicle finally, perhaps. Our roads are not racecourses - neither for "kicks" nor for making up on lost time. Jumping signals, not following speed limits, not wearing seat belts, driving under influence of alcohol, drugs, social media or phone conversation - are common crimes, and commonly answered with lives, too. 4. " Monkey Panic," by XYZ, While coming out of the bank I saw a monkey walking menacingly towards me. I panicked. The monkey snatched my bag and ran up a nearby tree. I was thunderstruck! This was money for my brother's operation due in four hours ( and it was also the money I managed to save in the five years five been doing this totally boring job, plus my loans). The first thing to cross my mind was the Jataka (was it?) tale of a trader whose caps a monkey stole and went up a tree (like this one) and which he retrieved by throwing stones, which the monkey replied with this eaps. Guess what? This didn't work. In real life, it didn't. One might think monkeys like bananas. Well, this one was not stereotyped so easily. I first threw one at him. No reply. Finished, I offered a whole bunch in prostration (by the way, I had my wallet left) and prayed to his human-loving "Hanuman" within. When this didn't work, I demoted myself to tearful cursing and yelling. My monkey was unperturbed. [Now, frankly, my situation was Laughable - and laugh they did, the people watching our spectacle. Only I couldn't even emerge from my kneeling. I tried climbing up the tree and courtesy of that, I have some scratches on my face to remind me of that day, I sat down finally, with an air of firmament. (The tears never stopped.) Seeing me quiet, the monkey conjured up a racket with its chattering, It actually came down the tree and was ambling up to me, "So the 's'm cool you're fool' stuff works then?" I thought. But, retaining its ability to surprise me, it moved past me to a young woman. She chained him and left me my bag. "So the bloody brat is a PET!" was all I could blurt out. She introduced herself (though & was not in a particularly good mood; I could have bitten that monkey myself). She was Prithi, monkey trainer. I forgot the Latin name she used for that. Or, was it? 6+2+2=1

Dedication and hard work are essential for success. 10. In 'Patol Babu, Film Star' penned by Satyajit Ray, Patol Babu is a fifty-two year old bald man who dreams of making it big in acting. He worked once in jatra's and theatre plays, having had his instruction from Giogon Pakrashi, But life's tide left him squandered in desolation. He retained his acting faculty yet, as also wisdom from his mentor. In the course of the story, he accepts an offer to act in a film, is dismayed by his monosyllabic role and finally discovers humility in Aimself. Even the miniscule role, he rehearses to distraction, comes up with his own props and times it to perfection. The objective him, affirms the perfection and he is praised by both the director and his star, In Patol Babu's laid-back life, "That" counts as a "success". He had dedication - evinced by his sincerity in practicing - and hard work certainly, in each motion he went through. One might deduce that to be a recipe for success.

Helen Keller's perseverance is, by all means, her most astonishing trait. In her autobiography 'The Story of My Life', we find her displaying that trait many times over-she continues, despite failure trailing her at each step, to Learn to read, write and finally speak to communicate herself. She never gives up her dream of going to college, at the very same pace as seeing and hearing girls of her age' and most importantly, takes up writing again after the shattering accusation of plagiarism. Her humanity, is another endearing trait. It shows in her love for fellow human being's downtrodden by poverty and differently abled children - whose causes she championed in her Later life. Her affinity to pets and nature, her sweet and loving nature and rustic tendencies are other manifests of that trait.

Her obstinacy, though, shines most brilliantly. Her never-sayspirit are what drewthe sympathies of her most illustrious admirers, men like Mark Twain and Alexander Giraham Bell. P. t. O.

Her steadfast will to learn to talk, go to college - against the opposition and laughter of her friends; and to complete her course at the Cambridge School in the proscribed three years, all point to this. That she never gave up on becoming equal to normal people in all manner of things is another instance, and the fact that she succeeded is one solace to anyone who finds himself disadvantaged Her unquenchable curiosity is one inspiring trait. All that she learned and tried to learn are brazen examples. Her strength of will and character shine in her successes. That iron will is Helen Keller's relic forhumanity, a gift unto all that don't bow to their circumstances and challenge them, I wish to be one.
